

MEET RYAN
Environmental Advisor

“Ramelius is a rapidly growing Company that keeps its identity and still puts its workers first, which I think is really important”

- Ryan

What does a typical day look like for you?

I've never been much of a morning person, so I tend to crawl out of my bed, get ready for work and make my way over to the mess for my usual scrambled eggs and hash brown. When I get to site I grab a coffee, start to plan out my day and try to knock out any minor tasks I have before the 7:30 HSE meeting. After that my days can be really varied, but I'll typically spend some time out of office taking water samples, doing environmental monitoring around site or ticking off any inspections that I've got scheduled. The rest of my day I'll spend in the office working at the computer or stirring up the SEO's when I have a little spare time in the afternoon.

Can you share a funny or interesting story from site?

On my fourth or fifth swing at Edna May, I was driving around site taking groundwater measurements at the boreholes around the tailings storage facility. It had rained the day before and just as I was finishing up and heading back to the office I got bogged on one of the tracks. I had to call the Processing Trainer to come and pull me out, of course afterwards he made it his mission in life to remind me every chance he got.

How long have you worked for Ramelius?

I've been with Ramelius for almost two years now.

What do you think Ramelius does well that sets them apart?

Ramelius is full of people that really look after you and encourage professional as well as personal development. It's a rapidly growing company that keeps its identity and still puts its workers first, which I think is really important.

What would you choose to do if you weren't in your current line of work?

I think I'd want to be an architect.

Off the Record:

Who would be the first celebrity guest in your very own talk show?

The first celebrity guest I'd have on would have to be Bill Burr. I love his deadpan comedy.

If you were stuck on a deserted island (and had all the food, water and shelter you needed) what three personal items would you bring?

A two-way radio, a speaker that has my Spotify playlist on it, and a telescope.

What book are you reading or tv show are you watching on Netflix right now?

Right now, I'm reading a book called Mortis, and I'm finally watching Peaky Blinders (so good).

What is your name and job title?

My name is Ryan Wisbey and I'm an Environmental Advisor at Edna May Gold Mine.

What inspired you to initially chose your career path?

I knew someone who was already working in the field – it seemed really interesting to me so I went and did my degree in Environmental Science and started work in the industry as soon as I could.

What three character traits would your colleagues use to describe you?

If I had to guess, they would probably say I'm friendly, reliable and a bit of a comedian.

What is something you are aspiring to accomplish in your career which you are yet to?

One day I'd really like to try and work overseas as an enviro. I love being immersed in other cultures, meeting new people and seeing lots of different things.
